[An Ending, a Beginning]

(Two detectives at the crime scene)

“Take a look at this, the tips of his fingers have been chewed right down to the bone!”

“God help us, looks like we got ourselves one of those deviant psycho killers ya read about. Have we got a name for this poor bastard?”

“We didn’t find any ID or driver’s licence on him; we did find a crumpled-up prescription with his doctor’s name on it.”

“Guess I’ll go pay the good doctor a visit then, unless of course you feel like doing some actual work for a change!”

“Ha-ha! No way man, I always avoid hospitals and medical-type places if I can help it, gives me the creeps!”

(Detective at doctor’s office)

“I would have described him as having a more... imaginative countenance.” [Doc]

“This is one of those cases I’m gonna have nightmares about! I’m tellin’ ya!” [Det.]

“I hope for your sake detective... you do not.” [Doc]

Filled with a nameless dread he left the doctor's office, and he could have sworn he had the most horrible taste of copper in his mouth.
